

Class KVH3 End of Term Report No 190 - 17 April 2005
Check In Register - Ms Bradbury

Now children, I want you all sitting down in a circle, please. Cross-legged. That's right, Keith - cross-legged. Yes I know you've got long legs, but they can still cross each other. Katrina - yes, you do want to sit next to David. No, he doesn't smell; it's just his trainers. Steven - please don't make me raise my voice. Keith - SIT DOWN! - oh, you are sitting down. Laura - what's that you're drinking? Well it doesn't look like orange squash to me - see me afterwards.

Right. Well I have to say that you have all behaved very badly. To start with, while I have been Headmistress, I have taught you all to be kind to animals, and I was ashamed of you today. Just because they roll in the mud, sniff each others' tails and scratch each others' backs with their bristly chins, that's no reason to make fun of the North Wiltshires - they are a historic breed of pigs, and believe it or not they are all God's creatures. Kathy - be quiet. Yes, you can have dinner in just a minute. Next, when I say we can't do PE today because there's too many of us, I don't expect you to start whining and moaning when I send you off on a cross-country run. It was only a short run - don't argue back Katrina. And yes Steven, we all know you can run for ever and ever, but Michael and some of the smaller children don't want to run for ever and ever. Ian - pay attention, and stop picking your nose. And what's that you're drinking? Beer eh? You may think you're a big boy, but you're not too big for a good smacking. Yes I can still do that - I retire today.

Now I thought it was a very nice run this morning, and I want you all to say a big thank-you to Michael for helping me to organise it. No Graham, he is not a sucky-up teacher's pet. He has just helped with the cross-country running more than anyone else. Stop sulking David - we all know you have helped too. And put your trainers back on. Did we all have a nice picnic half way round? Did you all like the cake and lemonade? Terence, stop telling tales. I'm quite certain you did not see Michael and Ian drinking beer - the very idea! Yes Kathy, you can have your dinner very shortly; and no, Graham does not keep trying to see your knickers. What? Well put some on, immediately! Yes, Steven, it is nice to see Raymond today. No, he has not been playing truant - he just goes to another school sometimes, for gifted children. Yes, he is special - but not in the way you mean, Ian - that's very unkind.

As you all know by now, this is my last term as Headmistress, and when you come back after holidays, there will be a new Head Teacher - who is going to be Mr Rees. Laura - that is very rude - you must not refer to him as 'Old Gerny'. And no Ian, he is not the 'Grand Old Bd'. Please write out 50 times 'I must not be rude to teachers'. Yes, you do know how to write - just not very well. Let's all give our new Headmaster a big cheer. Come on, all of you - or some of you, anyway!

Now, I'm going to read you all a little poem. Do stop booing, David. And then Mr Rees is going to say a few words. Wake up, Keith. Yes, you will like having Mr Rees as Headmaster. No, he is not strict. Well not very. And now, class, Raymond is going to sing us all a little song - isn't he a sweet little sunbeam? I want you all to join in. And Michael A is going to sing us all a little song too. Yes Kathy, it will be dinner time very soon.

Oh - you've got me a little present - how sweet of you all! No Katrina, I don't believe for a minute that Michael said he would utterly tough you up unless you put your pocket money in. No Steven, just because there aren't rockets and soldiers in it doesn't mean it's a boring picture; just carry on learning your geography. It's a lovely picture of where I like running. Thank you all very much, class - you've been absolutely - oh, very well Kathy - go and get your dinner. Oh - she's already gone....
